FOOD

Trends

It's been a busy month for me, which started off with a great meeting with our panel of health experts where we discussed healthy snacking, the importance of sleep and good sleep hygiene (which includes no phones or TV's in your bedroom!), and ways to get more active.

I also visited one of our Foodservice Academy suppliers Mungo Murphy in beautiful Rossaveal, Co. Galway with our panel of chefs to do some foraging and learn more about seaweed. It's such an interesting product and we learned so much from Cindy and Sinead from Mungo Murphy.

There's lots in this month's trend update too. This month with health and sustainability still on my mind I look at the expansion of Veganism and ask has it gone main stream, a new company delivering your shopping and making it easier to recycle plus can technology help us to drive loyalty in our customer base?

Have a great month!

TRENDS EXPERT

Has Vegan gone MAINSTREAM?

Plant based eating has been called out as a key foodservice trend for the last number of years, but I always got a sense that there was some scepticism about its longevity. So it's interesting to see that vegan options have now filtered onto the agendas of some of the key players in the foodservice and retail markets.

McDonalds has introduced a vegan option to its Happy Meal range, Greggs in the UK has introduced a vegan sausage roll and in retail Ben and Jerry now have a vegan ice cream offering. I think it is fair to say that plant based eating has now become ingrained in our food culture and is here to stay.

LOOP - a new way to recycle

Some of the world's largest brands are developing reusable packaging thanks to a new company "Loop" which launched this year at the World Economic Forum in Davos.

On Loop, you can order your groceries and have them delivered in reusable containers. Loop will then pick up the packaging, and reuse or recycle it. Loop will launch this spring in two trial locations in France and New York. Still not sold? In essence, Loop will take the hard work out of recycling and put the ownership back on the producer of the product rather than the consumer.

Sounds good to me and it definitely taps into the needs of a time poor consumer. Some big names on board include Procter & Gamble, Mars, Coca-Cola and Unilever.

IS TECHNOLOGY THE KEY TO DRIVING CUSTOMER LOYALTY?

Technology continues to be a key driver for foodservice businesses and their customers. As consumer needs drive them to seek time efficient ways to order and pay for food, personalisation of products and services and more cashless payment options, foodservice operations need to ensure they are keeping as up to date as possible with changes in technology to lock in that loyalty and allow them to interact with customers in a more meaningful way.

A great example of a company using technology to tap into and meet some of these consumer needs is Meal Plan, a US based company offering a lunch subscription plan which allows you to order and pay for your lunch on an app, skip the queue and save money by committing to 20 lunches per month at just $6 per lunch. You can choose from a range of options and in big cities like New York a $6 lunch can be hard to find!
