HEALTH

Trends

Hi All, I hope you had a great Christmas and New Year. Dare I say new year, new me? January can bring the blues, but it can also be the best time to change your diet by becoming healthier and improving your mood. By making small changes like weighing out your food or reducing salt or sugar intake anyone can improve their health.

For chefs, January can be the best time to try out a new menu by looking at the latest trends or trying new local produce. Call in to one of our Food Emporiums and speak to our in-house development chefs on advice about changing your menu or pick up some of our Foodservice Academy supplier's products which are all local artisan suppliers to try on your menu.

Have a great month!

Aisling

New future of Butters and Spreads

Health continues to be a huge topic in the food industry and we are constantly seeing new ways to improve our diets and become healthier. People are moving away from everyday butter and spreads and choosing more natural plant-based butters like watermelon seed butter or chickpea spread. These butters are less processed than normal butters and spreads which is better for your diet. With it being a new year why not try one of these butters and see can you make the change?

Chefs are rethinking Children's Menus

Children of the 21st century are little foodies and are becoming more adventurous eaters.

Chefs are seeing a change in children's eating patterns and are upgrading menus to include foods like non-breaded salmon fish sticks, organic chicken nuggets, pastas made from alternative flours and more. More and more different cuisine such as Japanese and West African are becoming popular in Ireland which is allowing children to explore different flavours from around the world.

This Month I will be... ↷

Meeting with our health team Trying new recipes for the new year

Are Superfoods the future?

Superfoods is a term that has been around for a while, but do we know what it means? Superfoods are foods that are nutritionally dense, meaning that they're heavy in the vitamin and nutrients categories such as fruit, vegetables, legumes and pulses. These foods can also add a healthy boost to your daily diet and reduce the risk of certain health problems.
